Angara embankment, monuments and churches, old houses with carved shutters and sparkling skyscrapers — Irkutsk looks like a city of contrast, but it could save its own harmony.

After one hour on the way from Irkutsk you will stop at the Golden Horde ethnic park, where you will get acquainted with the culture of the indigenous people of the Baikal region. You will listen to the fascinating throat singing performed by the local ensemble, have lunch in a huge Buryat Yurt and take part in a master class of making traditional Buryat dishes – meat dumplings, named “buuzy”.

After lunch you will continue the journey, making stops in the most interesting places. Then, in order not to wait in a queue to a ferry, you will take a boat trip to the Ogoy island, where you will visit the buddhist Stupa of Enlightenment. This Island has never been inhabited by people and it is considered to be “a pure land” — free from negative energy.

Afternoon you will ride a car to the northernmost end of the island, Cape Khoboy (translated from the Buryat language as a “fang”). It is considered to be a sacred place.

Taiga and steppe landscapes, sand dunes and rocky shores — all of these are found on the island, which is exactly what makes this place so unique. Some of the landscapes here resemble Mongolia, others look a lot like the Mediterraneans.

After picnic you will go back to the village of Khuzhir.

Day 5

In the morning you will have free time. You can take a walk around the Khuzhir village or just relax on the shore.
